

Consultancy and advisory models to support adoption and scale

Tom Staton

The challenge of delivering effective agroforestry advice

- Requires knowledge of agronomy, animal husbandry, horticulture, forestry, and their interactions
- Need to build capacity for innovation and support for long-term complexity
- Lack of knowledge and technical expertise is a key barrier to agroforestry expansion^{1,2}
- Learning from peers and demonstration examples is a driver of uptake³

Our question...

Are advisory services and knowledge-sharing systems 'fit for purpose' to support the upscaling of agroforestry in northern Europe?

Methods

- Surveys and interviews in four countries
- 16 participants:
 - 6 in UK
 - 4 in Denmark
 - 3 in Belgium
 - 3 in Poland
- Participants were experts in advice and knowledge sharing

Recommendations: Industry and Advisory Organisations

1

Fund advisory support alongside tree planting schemes

2

Sponsor knowledge exchange events and shows

3

Establish agroforestry adviser training and certification courses

4

Establish independent accreditation for experienced agroforestry advisers

Recommendations: Policymakers

1

Fund advisory services alongside capital / maintenance payments for agroforestry

E.g. Regionalised schemes in Belgium and Germany, funded advisory visits in Scotland

Provide stable and coherent agroforestry
policy frameworks,
reducing uncertainty and risk

3

Invest in demonstration farms, farmer networks
and knowledge-
exchange platforms

Recommendations: Research

1

Expand collaborations with farmers to promote peer learning e.g. living labs

2

Co-produce research agendas with farmers and advisers

3

Strengthen knowledge exchange with advisory services
